Can I have that?

By Ryan Wright

Matching game worn jerseys in the modern era of professional sports – easy. Going back 40 years, not as easy. Thankfully for the owners of a 1982-83 Michael Jordan North Carolina #23 jersey, there is no shortage of photos of the then rising star in action. Adding simplicity to the match, “His Airness” was featured on the cover of The Sporting News in March 1984 as the NCAA Player of the Year wearing the jersey that would be used in multiple non-conference games before the Tar Heels entered their ACC schedule… update – worth a million-plus.

Never underestimate those behind the scenes. Jordan’s UNC jersey was collected on Dec. 3, 1983, after an 88-75 win over Stanford. One of the Cardinal team managers, Chris Williamson, did a swap with a UNC team assistant. Among the items Williamson acquired included sweat-soaked game worn shorts and socks of Sam Perkins and Jordan’s jersey.

Worried about the state of sports memorabilia? No need, it is all trending upwards. The jersey sold at Heritage Auction on May 7, 2021, for $1.38 million. When Williamson put the game-worn jersey up for auction in 1999 it sold for $63,500 – a record price at that time.

Jumping ahead in time for Jordan and for collectors, a 17-game worn 1992-93 Jordan Chicago Bulls jersey sold at Heritage Auction for $2.623 million on May 17.

One can only imagine how much that Jordan UNC jersey would go for in today’s market.

Evolution of the Game: The Point Forward

BY RYAN WRIGHT

For decades professional basketball stagnated with positions based on the height of the player. If a guy was 6-foot, 9-inches, or taller, depending on the decade, safe bet they were a power forward or a center. Even with Magic Johnson coming into the league in 1979, the idea of a tall point guard was not a regular thing until the 1990's into the 2000's.

But in between the big men in the paint and the shorter guy running the show at the top of the key, forwards started to showcase ballhandling, passing, and shooting skills putting extra pressure on defenses which helped evolve the game to a new position that would be called the Point Forward.

Point Forward Beginnings

1975 Topps #100 Rick Barry

Change in the NBA takes time, and the point forward position would never come to be without players like Bob Pettit and Rick Barry. Pettit grew his game from a back to the basket low post player to being able to square up on defenders with a deadly jumper. The two-time NBA MVP could score, crash the boards, and dish it out.

Between the ABA and NBA, Barry could light up anyone. After seven-eight pro seasons, Barry developed another part of his game with the Golden State Warriors – becoming an assists man. Bumping from three to four per game, Barry was dishing the round ball at a pace of five to six from 1972-73 to '78-79, and all while putting up big scoring numbers.

Before LeBron James, there was John Johnson

Hundreds of hours could be spent watching old NBA highlight films without a single clip of the godfather of the Point Forward, Johnson, airing. Johnson played his college ball at Northwest College (1966-68) and Iowa (1968-70) before being drafted seventh overall in 1970 by the Cleveland Cavaliers.

The first five years of Johnson's career were among his personal best with a career-high 17 points per game in 1971-72 with 7.1 rebounds, and 5.1 assists per contest. Johnson made two All-Star appearances in 1971 and '72, then had a lull in his career playing with the Trailblazers (1973-75) and Rockets (1975-77) before finding his niche again with the Seattle Supersonics (1977-82).

With Johnson's arrival in Seattle, the Supersonics jumped from an eighth place finish out of the Pacific to an NBA Finals appearance at the end of the 1977-78 season. The following year, with future Hall of Famers Jack Sikma and Dennis Johnson by his side, Seattle won their first and only NBA Championship downing the Washington Bullets in a 4-1 series.

Johnson was smooth. He could get into the paint, had a nice midrange jumper, and could bang down low. His willingness to make the extra pass with creative ways to see the floor helped drive his NBA offenses to success.

Marques Johnson: Coin a Phrase?

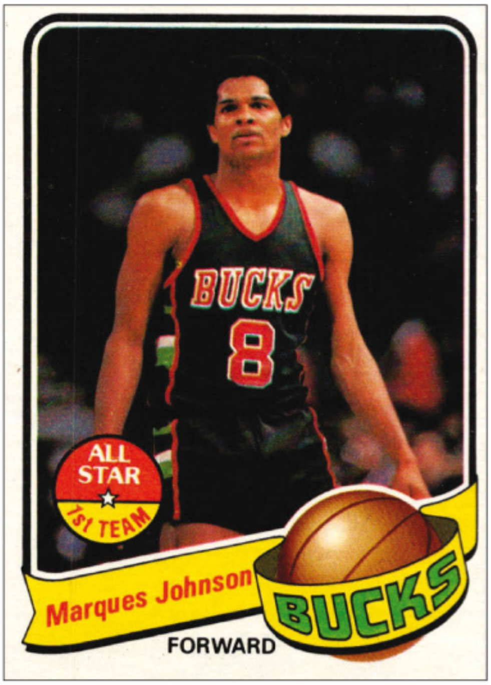
If you've never watched film on Marques Johnson, please, go do it. A legend out of UCLA earning National College Player of the Year in 1977 with a NCAA national title in 1975 on his resume with John Wooden, Johnson did not disappoint in the pros. A five-time All-Star, Johnson was a scoring machine with the Milwaukee Bucks (1977-84), Los Angeles Clippers (1984-87), and the Golden State Warriors (1989) putting up 20.1 points per game for his career.

Legend has it, that Johnson used the wording "point forward" during the 1984 playoffs bringing the phrase into the basketball lexicon.



1979-80 Topps #70 Marques Johnson

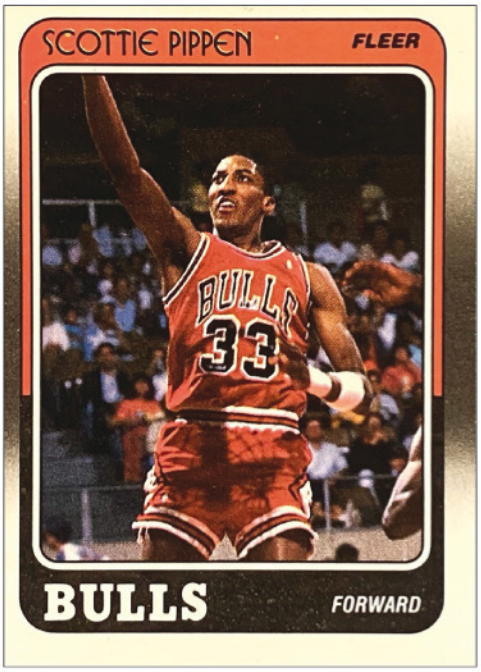
GETTY IMAGES

Because of injuries, head coach Don Nelson turned to Johnson to bring the ball up the court. Johnson reportedly asked, "instead of a point guard, I'm a point forward?"

It should be noted that Johnson would earn Comeback Player of the Year in 1986 with the Clippers as a guard blurring the lines, for some, on how to categorize his position on the court.

Another is he or isn't he, thanks to coach Nelson, is Paul Pressey (1982-1993). By some accounts, Pressey was a small forward. But anyone remembering watching him play, he was announced pregame as a guard. Taking it a step further, if John Paxson is guarding you during the 1990 playoffs, that line between small forward and guard is razor thin.

TRIVIA QUESTION: WHO WAS THE CLEVELAND CAVALIERS FIRST ALL-STAR SELECTION?



1988-89 Fleer #20 Scottie Pippen RC

The Next Era: Barkley and Pippen

Working from an offensive mindset, Barkley was a beast in the paint with a solid midrange jumper. Once with the Phoenix Suns, Barkley worked in the 3-point shot but was never prolific from deep averaging a career-best 33.8 percent during the 1994-95 season. Being the focal point of the offense for the 76ers and the Suns, Barkley would occasionally bring the ball up and work the ball around the paint averaging a career-best 5.1 assists per game during his MVP season in 1992-93.

Pippen's overall athleticism and skillset combined with Phil Jackson's Triangle Offense, the Point Forward position forever became established. Like Barkley, Pippen could get off his own shot and take defenders off the dribble, but he was so much more of that for the Chicago Bulls.

Starting in the 1989-90 season, Pippen posted five or more assists per game with a career-high 7.0 in 1991-90 while averaging 21.0 points and 7.3 rebounds. Not just running the fastbreak, because of his ball skills, Pippen could bring the ball up, initiating the offense for the Bulls off a defensive rebound.

Flipping the court, Barkley was never selected to the NBA All-Defensive Team. Capable of guarding point guards, shooting guards, small forwards and some power forwards, Pippen was a two-time second team All-Defense selection and eight-time first team honoree. Pippen could effectively do it all.

Point Forwards Continue

Through the '90's other true point forwards emerged like Anthony Mason with the Knicks and Hornets. Mason, unlike some others usually loosely associated with this list, Chris Webber, Rick Berry, Hedo Türkoğlu, and Larry Bird, actually served as a point guard bringing the ball up court working into a set offense instead of the offense working through the forward in a halfcourt set.

There are tweeners, like Pressey, that were shooting guards/small forwards that come close to fitting the bill: Grant Hill, Tracy McGrady, and Kevin Durant.

The next Pippen-esq player to fill the role was Lamar Odom. Throughout his career, Odom was a steady double-digit scorer who could rebound, dish the rock, and handle the ball anywhere on the court.

The New Standard

What new superlatives can be written about four-time league MVP and four-time NBA champion LeBron James? Like Pippen, James can do it all on both ends of the hardwood. Beyond his career numbers that surpass the aforementioned, James holds the all-time scoring record and is within reach of passing Jason Kidd (12,091) for third on the all-time assist leaderboard next season. Another high-performing season in 2026-27, James could ascend to second on the assists board surpassing Chris Paul (12,499). James' epic career that began in 2003 with the Cavaliers continues. The bar set by "King James" is so high it seems impossible for a future player to replicate much less surpass.

Topps first laced up their high-tops for a 1957-58 set, had a test set for 1968-69, and then released cards annually from 1969-70 until the 1981-82 issue. A mainstream hit in baseball and football, as Topps looked to expand their product offerings to collectors, in 1991 Topps Stadium Club for baseball hit the market and the following year, 1992-93 Topps Stadium Club basketball hit the shelves.

Looking back, with a print run of 10,000, how does the new line of cards hold up among collectors?

THE SET

The 1992-93 set mirrors Topps' effort on their football line: gold foil, the Topps' logo atop an oval representing a stadium, and a full bleed photo, which is awesome, taking away trim borders that often showcase horrible card cuts.

The set was 400 cards deep, two groupings of 200 cards, Series 1 and Series 2. The subset within was the "Members Choice" grouping, #191 to #210, identified in gold foil holographic effect across the bottom. Some of the players in the "MC" subset includes David Robinson, Larry Bird, Charles Barkley, Scottie Pippen, Karl Malone, Patrick Ewing, Dominique Wilkins, Michael Jordan.

At the time, with some crossover into today's market, the "Beam Team" insert was very popular upon release. As laser light shows were gaining popularity, NBA halftime shows started including that form of entertainment to occupy fans. The Beam Team picked up on the trend with laser lights in geometric patterns along the vertical borders. The insert featured 21 players starting with MJ with Shawn Kemp, Clyde Drexler, Reggie Miller, Chris Mullin, Kevin Johnson, Dennis Rodman, and Tim Hardaway in the mix.

A big draw then that remains today, rookie cards. In comparison to recent NBA drafts, the 1992 grouping was deep and talented. Highlighted by the top overall pick, Shaquille O'Neal (Magic), Alonzo Mourning (Hornets), Christian Laettner (Timberwolves), Jimmy Jackson (Mavericks), LaPhonso Ellis (Nuggets), Tom Gugliotta (Bullets), Walt Williams (Kings), Todd Day (Bucks), Clarence Weatherspoon (76ers), and Adam Keefe (Hawks) were the top 10 selections. Other notables, Robbert Horry was selected 11th by the Rockets, Doug Christie went at No. 17 to the Supersonics, and the Warriors picked Latrell Sprewell 24th overall.

ERROR OR PLANNED?

So collectors would know which player is a rookie, Topps marked the cards with “92 Draft Pick”. But not all draft picks were properly noted. Among the most notable, the third pick overall, Laettner.

Collectors looking for rookie cards and the Beam Team insert, all is found in Series 2. Another twist to the hunt for hobbyists, there is a Members Only factory set that includes all 400 cards. If hunting for singles, collectors can note the cards by the gold foil in the top corner.

LET'S TALK MONEY

Even though the print run of the set is 10,000, with some bumping the number to 12,000, there was not an overproduction of this Topps offering, but collectors still view the cards as part of the Junk Wax era tinkering with value.

Series 1 sealed factory boxes can run around $125 in today's market. Packs of 15 sold at the time could be purchased for $1.79. Topps also released a Series 2 jumbo pack of 23 cards. A complete 400-card set value all depends on who is selling it and who is buying. Sell prices were as low as $30 in May to $879 in the official Members Only binder, which came with a certificate of authenticity numbered to 12,000.

On the singles side, one card stands above the rest, the Members Only #1 Michael Jordan. A 10 grade on MJ's card can bring over $600. The top six cards in the set based on monetary value are split between Jordan and Shaq with Bird's #194, Patrick Ewing #100, and Karl Malone's #13 Members Only rounding out the top 10.

Surprisingly, there are 46 other cards that can bring $30 or more on the secondary market graded as a 10, making this set deep and talented, especially for the era.

Those Robert Parish, Glen Rice, and Muggsy Bogues cards in great shape in the back of the closet may earn a few bucks.

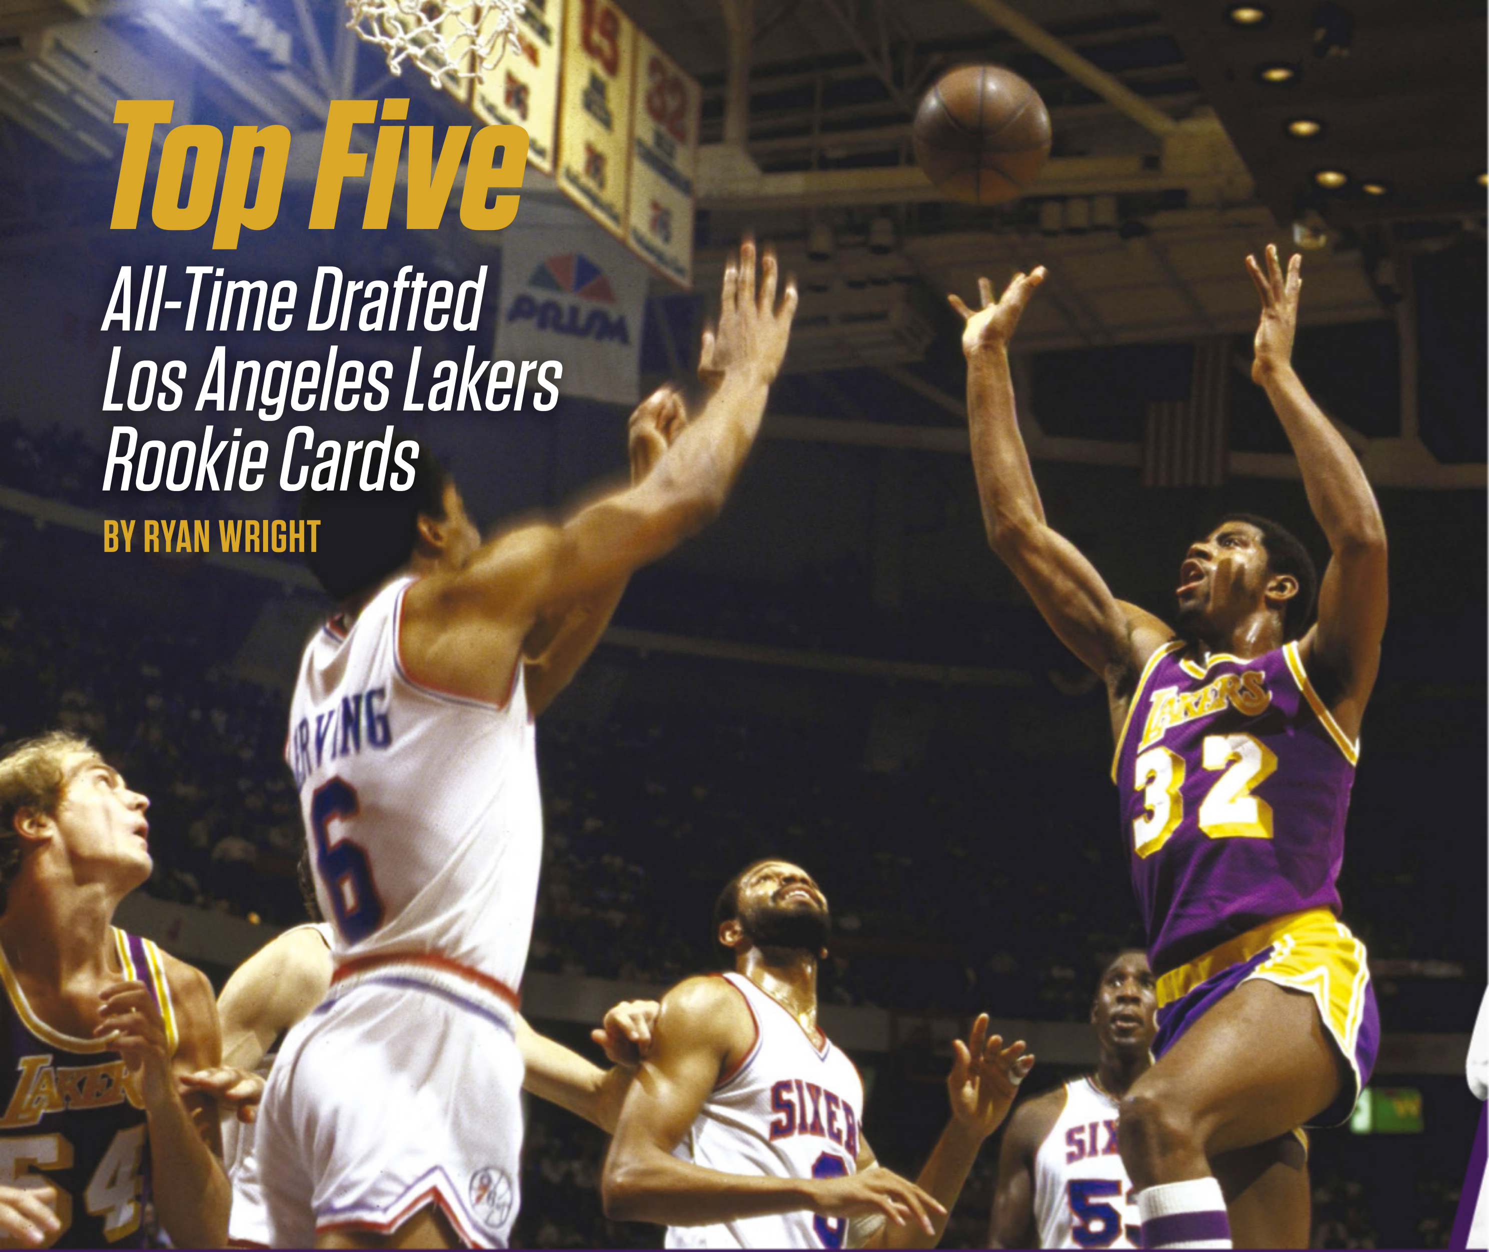
All-Time Drafted Los Angeles Lakers Rookie Cards

BY RYAN WRIGHT



GETTY IMAGES

Going down the list of Los Angeles Lakers' greats, a big piece of the NBA story is told. Take a subset of that story focused on rookies drafted by LA, well, that paints a picture that may surprise most – the Lakers are really good at acquiring talent but not so great at drafting elite players making a collection of top franchise rookie cards easier to collect than one may think.

Looking across the landscape of professional sports in the U.S., the Lakers are on that proverbial Mount Rushmore. The Yankees, Dodgers, and Cardinals, the Cowboys, Steelers, and Patriots, and the Celtics, Warriors, and Lakers – among the big three, those teams standout.

Where the Lakers lack in comparison to their Rushmore kin is identifying those rising talents year after year. Take the Yankees, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra, Whitey Ford, Mariano Rivera, Derek Jeter, Phil Rizzuto – all signed or drafted by the Yankees out of college or high school. The future Hall of Famers selected by the Lakers are few and far between.

Giving more opportunities, or room for error, the NBA drafts would sometimes go as long as 21 rounds (1960, 1968) until there were no more players eligible to pick. The draft was shortened to 10 rounds in 1974 and then down to seven in 1985, and finally to two in 1989, a format that continues to this day.

Picking up in 1960 when the Lakers moved from Minnesota to Los Angeles, Jerry West set a high bar. The logo is one of the game's best earning 14 All-Star selections and NBA Finals MVP (1969). As much as what West did for the Lakers on the court, he was perhaps even more influential within the game as an executive overseeing eight NBA championships.

After West's selection, even with high picks in subsequent drafts, LA would have to wait until 1965 to land another all-timer – Gail Goodrich. A five-time All-Star, Goodrich had two stints in LA, winning a title in 1972 before being enshrined into the Hall of Fame in 1996.

From 1965 until 1973, the Lakers had high draft picks like Jerry Chambers, Bill Hewitt, Willie McCarter, Jim Cleamons, and Travis Grant that did not pan out. A credible argument can be made for Jim McMillian. Picked 13th in 1970, McMillian had a couple of good seasons with the Lakers and with Buffalo but was never an All-Star.

Something that would be a trend, Los Angeles drafted players that flourished to All-Star status wearing other colors than purple and gold; see Kermit Washington (1973), Brian Winters and Billy Knight (1974).

Keeping with the organization from the late '70's into the Showtime era, "Stormin' Norman", Norm Nixon, was a late first round pick in 1977 (No. 22) earning an All-Star selection in 1982 with the Lakers.

The Lakers have had some bad airballs on draft day. For example, a year after drafting Magic Johnson with the top selection in 1979, Wayne Robinson was their first pick in 1980, 31st overall. After six exhibition games, Robinson was traded to the Pistons never playing a regular season game for LA.

A counter argument can be made, if a team like the Lakers are always winning, they will draft late missing out on top players. After Worthy went No. 1 overall in 1982, the Lakers' next top 10 pick would come in 1994. But there are draft gems the Lakers passed on in various drafts.

One example of a miss, selecting Ken Brlow 23rd overall in 1986 with their first pick in the draft watching Dennis Rodman go to the Detroit Pistons four selections later. Out of Notre Dame, Barlow was traded to the Atlanta Hawks for Billy Thompson and Ron Kellogg never playing in an NBA game instead opting for overseas teams like Tracer Milano in Italy.

Taken 23rd in 1985, A.C. Green was the role player LA needed at that time capable of giving double-digit points while playing good defense. Green got his only All-Star nod in 1990. Before leaving for Phoenix in 1993, Green was part of two LA championships (1987, 1988) and then returned towards the end of his career, winning a third with the Lakers in 2000.

Drafted in 1989, Vlade Divac made one All-Star appearance, but with the Sacramento Kings (2001).

After the Pat Riley-Magic Johnson era, the early '90's were hard times for LA winning 43 games in 1991-92, 39 the following season, and 33 games in 1993-94. The first-round picks from 1992-1994: Anthony Peeler, George Lynch, and Eddie Jones. Jones was a three-time NBA All-Star, but Lynch and Peeler never rose to that level.

Taking Peeler in the 1992 draft, the Lakers passed on another shooting guard of note: Latrell Sprewell; selected 24th by the Warriors. Proving it can happen, late-round success was found in Cincinnati point guard Nick Van Exel. Drafted in 1993, 37th overall, Van Exel made his only All-Star appearance in his last year with the Lakers (1998).

The next drafted Laker to be selected to an All-Star team after Jones was Andrew Bynum in 2005 and Marc Gasol, a second-round pick in 2007. Keeping the theme going, the next standout draft pick after Gasol was Julius Randle in 2014 and D'Angelo Russell in 2015. Within that run, in 2016 the Lakers had the second pick, taking Brandon Ingram. Ingram's talents took flight once leaving So Cal, becoming a 20-plus scorer per game with the Pelicans making an All-Star team in 2020.

One of the bigger recent successes for the Lakers has come outside of the draft, signing Austin Reaves as an undrafted free agent in 2021. As more is asked of Reeves, the shooting guard out of Wichita State and Oklahoma is responding with a career-high 20.2 points per game averaged during the 2024-25 season.

In a span of 65 years, the Lakers have drafted five players that would go onto the Hall of Fame: Jerry West, Gail Goodrich, Magic Johnson, James Worthy, and Vlade Divac. Over that same timeframe, 17 LA draft picks made at least one All-Star appearance during their career.

IS DEREK FISHER AN ALL-TIME GREAT?

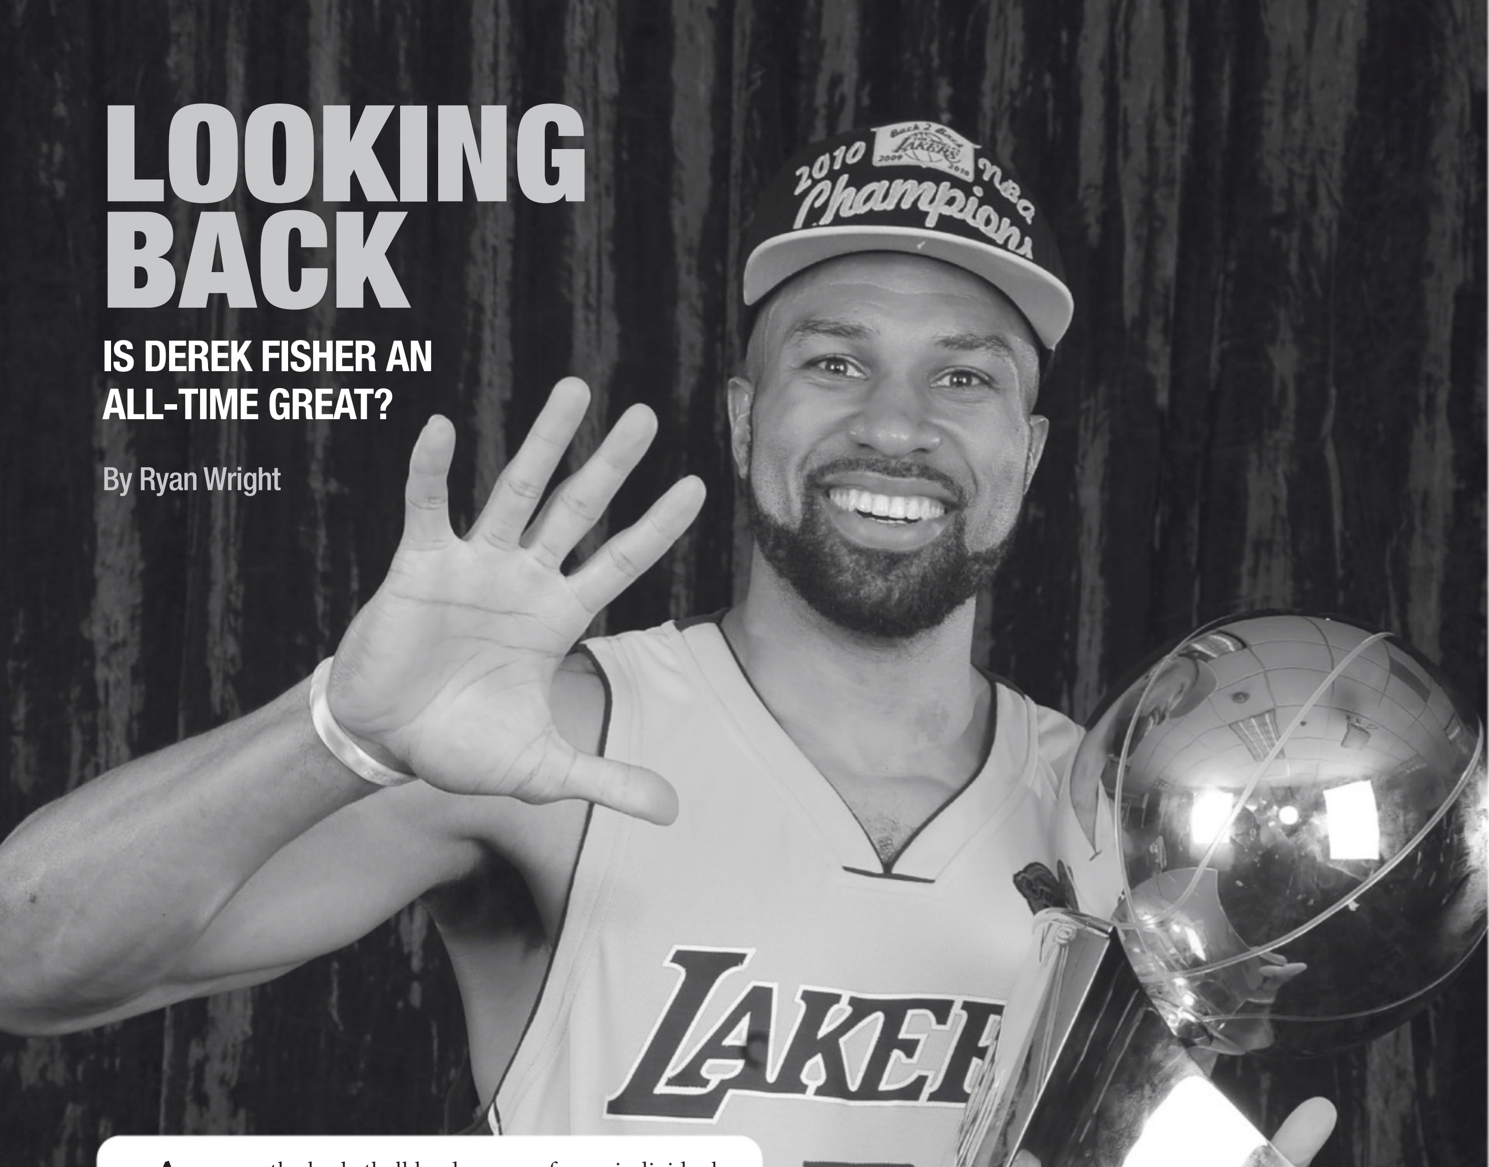
By Ryan Wright



GETTY IMAGES

Across the basketball landscape or for an individual franchise, a player can earn the label as one of the game's "greats" based on different metrics. If the values were number of games played, points scored, assists, and steals – all in the top 10 of a historic franchise, should that player be considered "great"? For some, yes, for others no, making the debate exciting, never ending, and all about one's opinion.

If you knew Derek Fisher (193) had more games played for the Lakers than Magic Johnson (190) and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar (180), more points scored (1,700) than George Mikan (1,680) and Michael Cooper (1,581), and more assists (507) than James Worthy (463), against those Basketball Hall of Fame players, how would you view "Fish"?

Some may have thought it or even said out loud, "he was good, but he was a role player".

The debate is raised, if a player is in the top 10 in meaningful statistical NBA categories for a historic franchise, where is the line between overlooked, undervalued, and better than given credit?

Putting context to Fisher's career; Fisher was a late first-round pick of the Lakers in 1996 out of University of Arkansas at Little Rock where he was a two-time All-Sun Belt selection (1995, 1996) and Sun Belt Player of the Year (1996).

Fisher had two runs in Los Angeles as the team's point guard, 1996-2004 and 2007-12. After leaving LA the first time, Fish had stints with the Warriors (2004-06) and the Jazz (2006-07), and some odd times with the Thunder (2012), Mavericks (2012), and back to Oklahoma City (2013-14) before retiring.

The easiest way to dismiss Fisher's importance is to cite that he was never selected as an All-Star or to any of the All-NBA Teams. But Fisher was key to five NBA titles for the Lakers playing an important piece in coach Phil Jackson's Triangle offense. More context, the only other point guards with a handful of rings: Magic Johnson (5), K.C. Jones (8), and Bob Cousy (6).

The stretch run of the Lakers from 1999-00 to 2002 was all about Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal. Both all-time greats took their lumps in 1999 from the Spurs then went on a run that would cement their place in history. Shaq would add a fourth title to his name with the Miami Heat in 2006, but Bryant kept adding rings in 2009 and 2010… with Fisher by his side.

Is a point guard that averaged 8.3 points per game and 3.0 assists for his career a Hall of Fame caliber player? Not in the modern era, but there are those in the HOF, like Jones, who averaged 7.4 points per game for their career with the Celtics. There are others like center Vlade Divac, who is in the Hall with just one All-Star selection and a career stat line of 11.8 points per game, 8.2 rebounds, and 3.1 assists, and he never won an NBA title.

The league has had its share of fantastic role players that turn up big when needed most but will more than likely never be inducted into the Hall of Fame, guys like Bruce Bowen, Ron Harper, A.C. Green, and "Big Shot" Robert Horry with his seven rings.

Given the statistics and five championships on his resume, Fisher is an all-time great for the Lakers, and Los Angeles is one of the game's most prominent franchises making his contributions to the game noteworthy. Beloved by fans, Fisher autographed cards continue to sell daily on the secondary market for a pretty penny 11 years after his retirement from the game.
